Today, for 10 minutes at least, I want you to write a half page about your Spring Break. Was it wasted? Was it well-used? Explain or Persuade!

This Spring Break was a break from the norm for myself and my wife Alexandra. We spent our entire break traveling around the world bouncing from continent to continent as we drank in the culture of every country we visited. We began by visiting Toronto, Ontario, Canada Saturday, March 11. It beyond freezing cold; the temperatures were the lowest of the year at -14 degree Celsius (whatever that is in Fahrenheit) . While there we enjoyed the sights Toronto offers but the most memorable part of Canada were the people. Canadians are the kindest people on Earth. Multiple times people helped us out without solicitation; nobody was every rude and people used the most polite tone when speaking with us. After Toronto, Alexandra and I went to Paris, France where we stormed around the city at a grueling pace seeing all the city could offer in as little time as we were there. We left with much of the city still undiscovered. We visited the historic Louvre Museum, the Centre de Pompidou (modern art museum), the Palace at Versailles, we ate meals with the locals and relatives, we took a boat tour of the city at night under the star like city lights, and we climbed the Eiffel Tower and the Sacred Heart Basilica. We also visited Brussels, Belgium for a day end got to see the gilded Grand Place square. Overall, the trip was amazing and I could write for hours on all we did and experience. But, alas, time is up and it time to begin our day!

What change, if any, needs to be made in this sentence?

Within a few weeks I had moved from the outfield to first base and finally to the pitchers mound.

5

F Change I had moved to moving

G Change finally to finely

H Change pitchers to pitcher's

DO NOW – 5 MINUTES

The term “neon light” was originally applied to a particular type of vapor lamp using the inert, colorless gas neon. A long tube was filled with neon, which then became luminous at low pressure when an electric current was passed through it. The lamp then emitted the characteristic reddish-orange light of neon. Today, the term “neon light” is given to lamps of this general type which may be filled with a variety of gases, depending on the color that is desired. Argon, for example, is used to produce blue light. Colors can also be altered by changing the color of the glass tube. The tubes must be quite long in all these lamps to produce light efficiently. As a result, high voltages are required. Neon tube lamps are not practical for indoor illumination, but they have found widespread outdoor use in glowing, colorful advertising signs.

Rewrite any sentence which is inferred from the selection.

Warm Up #12

- _____ 1. The inert gas neon is reddish-orange in color.
- _____ 2. The meaning of the term “neon light” has changed over time.
- _____ 3. Today’s “neon lights” never actually contain neon.
- _____ 4. All types of “neon lights” work on the same general principles.
- _____ 5. When stimulated by electricity, different types of gas may produce different colors.
- _____ 6. Modern “neon lights: are more efficient than those used in the past.
- _____ 7. The primary market for neon lights is businesses rather than private households.
